

Free Summer Library Media Camp for High School Students
Partnership between Louisville Free Public Library & Beargrass Media
Main Library 301 York Street
Monday, June 13 through Friday, June 17, 2016
10 AM - 4 PM (The Library opens at 9 AM)

There is no charge to participate, but seats are limited. Application instructions on reverse side.

The students will learn how to write, record, edit, and publish video and audio productions. The students will use video cameras, microphones, a teleprompter, green screen, iPad with stop motion video, and computers with video editing software and the Microsoft Office suite. The students will take stories from start to finish through the following steps: idea, story board, script, recording, file management, editing, special effects, sound design, rendered video, and publication on the web. The students will work on a variety of media styles including journalistic, personal narrative, socially conscious, PSA, and dramatic interpretation.

This program will also focus on improving the Louisville community in two important ways: First, it will have an emphasis on telling local Louisville stories: Telling stories about positive things that take place in our home town. Second, it will emphasize the importance of media in social activism. Students will have an opportunity to experience how to advocate for positive change through storytelling.

The students will work with Beargrass Media Director Patrick Fitzgerald, and LFPL staff. The course will also have guest facilitators who work as media professionals in movie making, radio, television, advertising, sports management, social entrepreneurship, and environmental justice. The course will take place at the Main Library but will also take a walking tour to WHAS Television Studio, the Public Radio Partnership studios, the Courier Journal, and Bisig Impact Group.

To participate, students will need an email account and access to the internet. (Students can sign up for an email account at the Library.) Students will also need to have a signed video release form to participate as well as a signed permission slip for the walking tour to the media site visits. Students will also bring their lunch.
